SLIPPERY MADDEN ESCAPES AGAIN ON BRIDGE OF SIGNS

Search of Tombs Fails to Reveal Man Who Fled Twice Before.

Armed guards carrying electric flash lights searched the dim corridors in the basement of the Tombs prison to-day, explored every recess of the yard and building and tramped back and forth across the Bridge of Signs, searching unsuccessfully for Peter Madden, a wiry little man weighing scarcely more than 100 pounds, who crowned his exploits of escaping twice from the Yorkville Court some months ago by disappearing to-day from the line of prisoners as they were marched from the Tombs to the Criminal Courts Building across the Bridge of Signs. Not a trace of Madden was found, though how he could have escaped from the prison building or from the Court-House is a mystery.

There were sixteen prisoners, eight pairs of two each and beside them marched six guards. The sixteen had been manacled in the Tombs. Madden was made fast to John Ryan, accused with him of the robbery of a sleeping man in Madison Square Park last June 25. The cuff which held Ryan's right wrist was connected by a short chain to a similar ring of steel about Madden's left wrist. When the line had crossed the Bridge of Signs the guards saw for the first time that Ryan was marching alone. From his wrist dangled the cuff which had locked Madden to him. "Where's Madden?" cried Detective Murphy and Brennick, who had arrested the couple and were waiting for them to continue their trial before Judge Swann, started yesterday. "I don't know. He got away on the bridge," declared Ryan, and instantly the alarm was given.

The search has not been abandoned, though Warden John Hanley of the Tombs declared that every cranny of the structure had been explored. On June 18, when he was arraigned in Yorkville court, Madden waited till Detective Finn stepped out of the

"It's Different Coming Home Now—"

"I used to come back 'o town in the autumn feeling a little blue," she said. "The apartment was oppressively still. Chairs to sit upon, books in the library to read, cosy dining-room, comfortable bedroom—but it was all so quiet. And my heart was full of the music of moors and mountains. During the days when I was putting home to rights for the winter, my thoughts would constantly go back to the hills and the sunshine and the jolly out-of-doors days. It was a long time before the summer-charged spirit settled down and gave way to the new spirit of the town home. But now—"

A glad light came into her eyes—"now I have
